Island gigantism or insular gigantism is a biological phenomenon in which the size of an animal isolated on an island increases dramatically in comparison to its mainland relatives. Island gigantism is one aspect of the more general "island effect" or "Foster's rule", which posits that when mainland animals colonize islands, small species tend to evolve larger bodies, and large species tend to evolve smaller bodies.

islands as hamartomatous malformations in the bone are known to be asymptomatic in nature [2,3]. A giant bone island, defined as having a diameter greater than 2 cm, has been rarely reported [2,4-10, 11]. We report the case of a 41-year-old male patient with a symptomatic giant bone island of the tibia mimicking a lesion of the medial meniscus.

Once isolated on an island, large mammal species evolve dwarf sizes and, conversely, small mammal species evolve giant sizes. The pattern is so consistent that ecologists call it a rule, the "island rule", which describes a gradational trend in body size from gigantism in small species to dwarfism in large species.
